The card was, all in all, a disappointment to the great throng. The steeple-chase was a walkover for Rising Sun, who cleared the first jump and then walked home. This was due to the fact that Eophone was lame, Colbert was not at the track, and The Brulser, the only other entry, was dead.

In the performance of Hyphen in the last race of the day, however, there was much colace for the lovers of good racing. Hyphen ran a mile and a six-teenth in 1:44.4.5, beating Herbert's track record by two-fifths of a second. He was eased up, too, in the last six-teenth, and even then won by four lengths

The Patsy Mann Bone Factory, of ederiferous fame, the stench from which has harrowed the olfactories of excursionists on the river for many years, is about to take its nefarious place in history. Mr. Mann informed the Commissioners yesterday that he proposed to abandon the enterprise and leave the site of the factory to the bats and vermin of that part of the District,

This news came to the District Commissioners yesterday by way of a letter from the Corporation Counsel, inclosing a letter from the attorney of Mr. Mann. In his letter to the Commissioners, Mr. Duvall, Corporation Counsel, says:

Mr. Duvall's Letter.

"Mr Mann has concluded to discontinue his fertilizer works at Giesboro Point, which have been the occasion of great and continuous public complaint. His attorney states that Mr. Mann has 'permanently discontinued taking dead animals to his fertilizer works on the river below Giesboro Point, and intends in the near future to entirely abandon the manufacture of fertilizers in the District of Columbia.' And as a consideration for this action he asks that the pending cases against him be discontinued.
